Lecture 10: Graphs

Heading: Graphs
A graph is a non-linear data structure consisting of a finite set of vertices (or nodes) and a collection of edges that connect pairs of vertices. Unlike trees, graphs can contain cycles, have multiple paths between vertices, and have no designated root node. Graph representations include adjacency lists and adjacency matrices.